WOMEN WORKERS IN THE SOVIET INTERWAR ECONOMY

Women were and still are far behind men in earnings, and this gap has been widening in the past decade. While in the 1980s, the wages of women constituted, on average, 70% of men's, by the end of 1999 this figure had dropped to 52%, and in 2000, to only 50%. The majority of women continue to work in public sector of the national economy.

Despite this, many Russian women have achieved success in business. The total fertility rate of Russia is 1.61 as of 2015, which, although below replacement rate of 2.1, is still higher than in the 1990s. In the post-Soviet era, the position of women in Russian society remains at least as problematic as in previous decades. In both cases, nominal legal protections for women either have failed to address the existing conditions or have failed to supply adequate support.
